

WHAT IS ORAC?

ORAC stands for Oxygen Radical Absorbance Capacity, is a measure of the ability of a food or any other substance to quench oxygen free radicals in a test tube. Determining the ORAC unit, ORAC value or ORAC score was developed by scientists at the National Institute of Health and Aging (NIH) to measure the antioxidant capacity of different foods. Studies have shown that antioxidants in foods can boost the antioxidant power of the blood.

Antioxidants are important because they combat free radicals in our body that are created from daily living, stress, environmental pollution, medical x-rays and even exercise. How many ORAC units do you need per day? It is estimated that men, who consume an average of about 2500 calories a day need at least 11,000 ORAC units. Women, who eat about 1800 calories per day, should get at least 8,000 units.

PROTECT YOUR DNA

PREVENT ONSET OF DISEASES

Telomeres are caps at the end of each strand of our DNA that protects our chromosomes, like the plastic tips at the end of shoelaces. Without the coating, shoelaces become frayed until they can no longer do their job. Similarly, without telomeres, DNA strands become damaged and our cells can't do their job.

As you know, it is the genetic material (DNA) that makes us who we are. DNA makes up all of the cells in our body. Every organ in our body is made up of cells. So, telomeres are vital to our health. Our cells replenish by copying themselves. This happens constantly throughout our lives. Telomeres get shorter each time a cell copies itself, but the important DNA stays intact. Eventually, telomeres get too short to do their job, causing our cells to age and stop functioning properly. Therefore, telomeres act as the aging clock in every cell.

How Can You Protect Telomeres?

Here are 5 proven ways to keep your telomeres longer, potentially slowing down the aging process on the DNA level.

- ✓ Maintain a healthy weight
- ✓ Exercise regularly.
- ✓ Manage chronic stress
- ✓ Have telomere-protective diet
- ✓ Take High ORAC value supplements
